

By Geoffrey Smith

April 5 (Bloomberg) -- Natural gas futures in New York may rise higher than $8 per million British thermal units for the first time in two months, according to analysts who study historical price graphs and volume charts.

"The tendency has been to rise," Chesler said. "The average size of the advances were twice the size of the declines."